The Gallipoli Art Prize is a privately funded prize, sponsored by the Gallipoli Memorial Club in Sydney. It invites artists to respond openly to the broad themes of loyalty, respect, love of country, courage, comradeship, community, peace and freedom as expressed in the Gallipoli Memorial Club's creed.

"We believe that within the community there exists an obligation for all to preserve the special qualities of loyalty, respect, love of country, courage and comradeship which were personified by the heroes of the Gallipoli Campaign and bequeathed to all humanity as a foundation for perpetual peace and universal freedom". The Gallipoli Memorial Club Creed.

An extraordinary mixed media piece by Julianne Ross Allcorn "On the Edge" is made up of a fore-edge painting [a scene painted on the edges of book pages] in pencil and watercolour on war history books. "The skill of fore-edge painting has fascinated me for a long time and I wanted to create an artwork that had a deep connection to the written word, the recording of history. In this instance the writings of war times. A list of War Artists is in the little art journal." Says Allcorn.

The art prize was also affected by the recent Cyclone Alfred with some artists determined to get their entries in by the closing date despite road closures and transport delays. Entries also came from much further afield with two international artists amongst the finalists this year - Bilge Yuceer Karakus from Turkiye with the work "Bullet Bird" and Amanda Goose from the UK with "Veterans" .

While many of the works reference WWI there are also works depicting contemporary servicemen including Naomi Lawler's portrait of her father and Ross Townsend's 'Duty Calls.' Many finalists take inspiration for their works from distant or close relatives who have served in the armed forces such as Henry Kerr's vibrant and loving portrait titled 'Grandad'.

Animals also feature in the works including A.E Stubbs-Race haunting artwork, "LEFT" a painting of a lone horse. Several Australian war horses were left behind at Gallipoli Cove and their descendants can still be found living on the Gallipoli peninsula.

"I am always impressed by the diversity of the works and how individual artists choose to respond to the special qualities within the Gallipoli Memorial Club's Creed.

While the winner was a unanimous choice, there was much discussion amongst 5 paintings which were very competitive. These art works inspire us to reflect deeply on perpetual peace and universal freedom, which is much needed in the world today," said John Robertson, President of the Gallipoli Memorial Club and one of the judges of the prize.

Judging for this year's Prize is conducted by Jane Watters, Barry Pearce, Elizabeth Fortescue and John Robertson. Previous winners of the Gallipoli Art Prize include prominent artists Euan Macleod (2009), Idris Murphy (2014) and Jiawei Shen (2016). Stencil artist, Luke Cornish, won the 2024 Art Prize with his Aerosol/Acrylic on canvas work – "The Pity of War"
